Mt. Pleasant’s Request for Extension to Review Group Home Denied

By Neal Rentz

An organization looking to operate a group home in Valhalla for six young adult women with intellectual and developmental disabilities last week refused to allow the town additional time to review the application.

Mount Pleasant Supervisor Carl Fulgenzi said the Town Board was taken aback by YAI/Seeing Beyond Disability’s decision against granting the town a 20-day adjournment, time that is allotted in the state mental hygiene law. Town officials learned of the denial last Thursday. Under the state’s review process for group homes, a municipality has 40 days to respond to Review Group Home Denied.

Mt. Kisco Custodian Granted Asylum Hearing; Reunited With Family

By Martin Wilbur

The undocumented Mount Kisco synagogue custodian who had been detained by authorities and faced deportation to his native Mexico received one of the best holiday gifts he could have hoped for – the day after Christmas.

Armando Rojas, who in November lost his bid for asylum in an upstate immigration court proceeding, was released from custody on Dec. 26 and arrived home to Mount Kisco two days later.

Rabbi Aaron Brusso of Bet Torah, who had worked for about 20 years before he was picked up by authorities last winter, outlined the sudden turn of events last week in a Facebook post. Brusso wrote that Rojas is now being granted a full asylum hearing based on a decision by a Washington, D.C. federal circuit court judge.

On Dec. 17, in the case Grace v. Whitaker, U.S. District Court Judge Emmett G. Sullivan struck down former attorney general Jeff Sessions’ redefinition of asylum. It was the narrower interpretation of asylum that resulted in the denial of Rojas’ claim that he feared for his life because of violence in his former community in Mexico if he returned, according to Brusso.

As a result, attorneys working on behalf of Rojas were able to file a request for review with the Department of Homeland Security.

"On Dec. 26, on the day he was due to be deported, we were informed that his deportation was rescinded and he was being granted a full asylum hearing," Brusso stated.

He arrived home to his family on Dec. 28 where he was reunited with his wife and two sons, Brusso said. Rojas also met his infant grandson for the first time.

There is no date for when the full asylum hearing will be held, although it could be months from now, if not more than a year.

In February, Rojas was arrested and thrown out of the United States. Bet Torah members twice flew to San Diego to meet him in Tijuana. He was eventually readmitted into the United States but was taken into custody and held in New Mexico before being transferred to a facility in Albany.

Rojas came to the United States when he was 18 years old in 1986 and has lived in Mount Kisco for more than 20 years, where he has served as a custodian at Bet Torah, the synagogue on Smith Avenue.

In October, several hundred Mount Kisco residents and Bet Torah congregants along with members of the local faith community held a vigil outside the synagogue on Rojas’ behalf.

Longtime P’ville Auto Shop Closes on Site of Proposed Development

By Anna Young

LaDuca Auto Service in Pleasantville has vacated its property on Depew Street to pave way for a potential mixed-use development at the site.

The recent closing of the car repair shop, located at 52 Depew St., comes after a Westchester developer appeared before the Village Board in June and Planning Commission in September to pitch a proposal to purchase and redevelop the land and the adjacent 1 Vanderbilt Ave., into a 73-unit apartment complex.

As of last week, owner Vincent LaDuca closed the shop, according to Village Administrator Eric Morrissey. The Examiner has been told by sources that the business plans to relocate to

Hagadus-McHale Sworn in By Latimer to Mt. Pleasant Town Board

By Neal Rentz

The first Mount Pleasant Town Board work session of the new year on Jan. 2 was a historic one – it was the initial meeting for the first Democrat to be elected to the board in about 30 years.

Francesca Hagadus-McHale was sworn in last week and then took a symbolic oath of office one night later, with about 40 friends and family members in attendance. Westchester County Executive George Latimer administered the oath of office.

"Francesca's been a friend," Latimer said of participating in the ceremony. "She was very helpful to me in 2017 when I won an uphill race. She carried a very steep climb in this race."

"In a community where Democrats have not had much success over the last 30 years, it's really an exceptional victory," he continued. "I think it speaks to her as an individual and so I wanted to be here to share in the moment for her."

Latimer said during his 2017 county executive campaign Hagadus-McHale "did the old-fashioned grunt work," including knocking on doors and going to train stations with him. Latimer returned the favor last year by doing some campaigning for her.

Supervisor Carl Fulgenzi said he looked forward to working with Hagadus-McHale.

"We're all working for the same thing. That's what's important," Fulgenzi said. "We're all trying to do the right thing for our county and our towns," he added.

By early November, the Democratic caucus of the Board of Legislators wrote a letter to the two immigration judges that would decide his fate vouching for his character. A little more than two weeks later, Rojas lost his case and was scheduled to be deported.

A person can seek asylum for protection from persecution based on race, religion, nationality, being a member of a particular social group or political opinion, according to the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. Anyone seeking asylum has up to one year after arriving in the United States to apply.

Joining Latimer and Hagadus-McHale was the new councilwoman's sister, Claudia Hagadus Long, who flew in from her home near San Francisco. Her sister held their grandfather's bible.

"I am honored to have George swear me in," Hagadus-McHale said. "I am humbly grateful for all the work that everybody put to this and I am ready to get to work for the Town of Mount Pleasant. You've been most cordial to me and most helpful."

"This is a celebratory night," she also said. "It's the beginning of a new year and a new era."

Hagadus defeated Republican Councilman Anthony Amiano in a special election in November. Amiano was appointed by the Town Board last spring to replace Mark Rubeo, who became a town justice. Hagadus-McHale is filling the final year of Rubeo's four-year term and has made her intentions known that she will be seeking a full four-year term in the fall.

Harckham Sworn into Office Promoting New Agenda for State, District

By Martin Wilbur

State Sen. Peter Harckham vowed Sunday the state new legislature would make significant gains on a progressive agenda while also tending to the needs of local municipalities at his swearing in ceremony at Peekskill High School.

The event, which saw Harckham given the oath of office by Gov. Andrew Cuomo, a resident of the district who had appealed to the former Westchester County legislator to run for the seat, also had a recurring theme of promoting diversity and inclusion while rejecting the politics of fear and division.

During his address, Harckham reached out to the array of elected officials in the audience from throughout the district, which extends northward into parts of Putnam and Dutchess counties. Most in the crowd thunderously applauded his comments.

“...we have a lot of local issues that we need to deal with,” said Harckham, the first Democrat to represent northern Westchester and Putnam in the state Senate since 1914. “First and foremost, to my colleagues in local government, it doesn’t matter whether you’re a Republican or a Democrat, what the make-up of your towns are. I work for you and I can’t be successful unless all of you are successful. But it’s not about me about imposing some vision on your municipality. We’re a support system to you for what you are trying to accomplish.”

In the upcoming session, which is scheduled to open this Wednesday, Harckham said there will be immediate attempts at proposing and voting on longtime measures such as the red flag bill which can temporarily remove firearms from gun owners who are deemed a threat to themselves and others, reproductive health care protections for women, the Child Victims Act and election reform.

He said more must be done to help state residents who have fallen victim to opioid addiction.

There must also be a focus on local issues such as economic redevelopment, transitioning the state away from a reliance on fossil fuels to green energy and to protect the taxpayers of the Village of Buchanan, the Town of Cortlandt and the Hendrick School District with the pending 2021 closure of Indian Point nuclear power plant, Harckham added.

“We have 1,200 families who are living with uncertainty about what that’s going to do to their school district and municipality,” Harckham said. “We’re going to focus like a laser on economic redevelopment and see what we can do to save those jobs by requiring Entergy to hire them during decommissioning of the plants.”

Cuomo, who asked Harckham to run for the office last spring, said he’s excited for the 40th Senate District because it is getting an outstanding public servant. Harckham has worked in the public sector, private sector and the nonprofit world and is particularly qualified to help move the state forward, he said.

“He knows the job, he knows it from every aspect but he has a heart as big as the state of New York,” Cuomo said. “He’s doing this for all the right reasons.”

Cuomo then turned his attention how with the current federal government is stoking fear and “spreading a cancer” that is dividing the nation that it is left to the state to lead the way.

“The state is going to stand up and fill that void that this federal government is creating,” he said. “Let them try to divide us. Let them try to divide us by religion and race. We’re going to say the exact opposite in this legislative session. We are united, we respect each other’s rights. We stand up for women’s rights, which have been disrespected. We stand up for the LGBTQ community. We’re going to set a tone of unity rather than division.”

the notice we received during a holiday period,” Fulgenzi said. “We have always tried to make sure challenging proposals are not scheduled during periods where public input could be hampered. We have received a tremendous amount of e-mail communications, mostly against, that the board needs to review.” Fulgenzi said because YAI had refused the town’s request for an extension and the opportunity to properly review the proposal, the town attorney has objected on Mount Pleasant’s behalf. The group home would be located at 5 Halsey Place.

Officials believe there is oversaturation of similar facilities in the town. Last month the supervisor said Mount Pleasant is already home to 26 facilities that are off the tax rolls. A state commissioner’s hearing would be held, probably sometime in the next few months, to determine whether the town’s objection has merit.

Fulgenzi said town officials want to help those in need but nearly one-third of all property in Mount Pleasant is tax exempt. YAI, a Manhattan-based outfit with about 4,000 employees serving more than 20,000 people mostly with autism, Down syndrome and cerebral palsy, has sought an exemption from property taxes, which would cost the taxing entities a combined $17,000 annually.

“I want to make sure that we are prepared for economic challenges that may lie ahead,” Fulgenzi said. “A strong financial position for Mount Pleasant is good for all of us. We have come a long way and we have much to accomplish over the next few years and the infrastructure improvements we are working on are not free.”

Speakers during the Dec. 27 Town Board meeting where the issue was discussed were split on whether the group home should be approved. Messages left for representatives of YAI and other Town Board members were not returned.

redevelop the land has been filed, representatives for David Mann of Lighthouse Enterprises in White Plains have said at public meetings that they were seeking feedback from village officials on the potential proposal prior to submission. Lighthouse Enterprises is the contract vendee for the just over one-acre property.

Plans include development of a three-story building that would consist of 11 studio apartments, 49 one-bedroom units and 13 two-bedroom units upstairs. Tenants would have the option to access the roof for recreational use. There would also be 4,500 square feet of commercial space on the first floor.

Estimated rent for studios would be roughly $2,000 a month, one-bedroom apartments would range from $2,300 to $2,700 and two-bedroom units would cost more than $2,700. The developer also discussed 108 underground and ground-level parking spaces, with 22 stacker spaces to be assigned to the two-bedroom units.

The complex would require site plan and possibly special permit approval. With the site located in an A-1 commercial district, the project would require a special permit if the plan was changed to provide residential on the first floor.

Armonk Developer Weighs 2019 North Castle Town Board Run

By Martin Wilbur

A local developer who has repeatedly battled town officials for years on a wide range of issues said he is mulling a run for a seat on the North Castle Town Board this November.

Armonk resident Michael Fareri said he will explore a candidacy or possibly reach out to other residents to form a slate of candidates because he is disenchanted with what he listed as stagnant assessables, a decrease in property values and taxes that have crept up by about 25 percent over the past 10 years.

Fareri said the town has made it too difficult for development to take place, making it difficult for the town to realize an increase in assessable property. Costs per square foot for North Castle real estate has fallen by about 50 percent in the past decade, he contended.

“So, it’s my opinion, if I was on the Town Board and why I’m considering potential getting involved, I don’t want to see these decreases in property values continue,” said Fareri, who has lived in town for close to 45 years.

He said that if he was on the board, he’d support policies that would increase development and assessable properties. Fareri also said he would support an independent study to look at staffing and salaries and whether certain functions could be outsourced in hopes that the town operate more efficiently.

He pointed to the building and highway departments as areas that could be improved and questioned why North Castle needs about 34 officers and spend more than $8 million annually on the police department.

“I think the town has a lot of different ways to improve itself,” he said. “I would look at outsourcing certain departments in town that I don’t think are done very well.”

Fareri has also butted heads with the current board over the stockpiling of road millings at the highway department property in Armonk and on Middle Patent Road.

This is not the first time that Fareri has floated the idea of running for town office but to this point he has not followed through with pursuing a candidacy. A registered Republican, Fareri said he wants to take more time. He would expect to make a decision in about three to five months in time to file petitions.

“I’m going to test the market. I’d have to search my own conscience to see if I’m willing to put the time in as a member of the Town Board,” Fareri said. “I have to discuss this with my friends and family and I’d like to see, and hopefully find, other people in the community who have an interest in serving the community to make it better.”

He declined to answer whether he would pursue a major party nomination or seek an independent line, saying that with town issues labels are virtually meaningless.

Fareri has been a lightning rod for controversy in recent years, butting heads with town officials, including the current Town Board regarding two of his properties, the site of the old lumberyard on Bedford Road and 470 Main St.

He has continually accused the board of treating him unfairly for refusing to allow him to transfer six affordable units from the lumberyard site to Main Street and for forcing him to provide 20 percent affordable units at the lumberyard.

The developer has also sued the town regarding development issues and launched a federal civil rights lawsuit against current Supervisor Michael Schiliro. The suit was initiated after he was prohibited from speaking at a Town Board meeting unless he apologized to a town employee. The suit was settled out of court.

Greeley Holiday Week Threat Deemed Not Credible By Police, Security

By Anna Young

The Chappaqua Central School District was forced to increase security measures last week after an online post was discovered that threatened a shooting at the Horace Greeley High School campus.

As students and teachers were concluding their first day back at school following the holiday break, Superintendent of Schools Dr. Christine Ackerman notified parents via e-mail that Amazon security contacted the New Castle Police Department last Wednesday afternoon alerting them to a threat made on their streaming service on Christmas Day.

Representatives from Amazon shared that on Dec. 25 a person using Twitch, an Amazon-owned streaming service for video games and chatrooms, said “Tomorrow, I am going to shoot up Horace Greeley High School in New Castle.”

While the threat was deemed not credible by both Amazon security and New Castle police, Ackerman reinforced the district’s security measures and encouraged parents to contact her or the police department with any safety concerns or questions. Additional police presence was provided to the district’s six schools.

“I want to remind all of our families that we have a New Castle Police officer stationed at Greeley throughout the school day and we vet all of our guests during school hours before entering our campus,” Ackerman said.

With school safety an immediate concern last year following a string of school shootings nationwide, Chappaqua officials shifted their focus to advancing security measures districtwide. Following what appeared to be a negligent information gathering process, the district put a halt to a potential $7.4 million bond that would have paid for districtwide school security enhancements.

The proposed bond would have reduced the high school’s four entrances to a single entry with a secured vestibule where students and visitors would have to be screened at a transaction-style window and buzzed in. Doors would have had a locking mechanism and be covered with bulletproof security glass.

The plan also called for the creation of two enclosures that would have allowed students to access any part of the building without exiting any of the four entrances. The proposed corridors would have been between the gym and auditorium and the main entrance and library.

Instead, the Board of Education chose to move forward with smaller cost-effective changes to secure each school, citing that they were reluctant to change the culture of the district. The board agreed last June to modify the elementary schools and middle schools and create vestibules in the buildings that required restructuring.

At the high school, safety policies were reviewed, there were additional security officers deployed and visitors are now vetted at the campus entrance.

With the online threat still under investigation, Ackerman stressed school officials are doing everything to ensure the safety of everyone in the buildings.

“The safety of our school community is our highest priority,” Ackerman said. “We continue to encourage all of our students, staff and families to report any security concerns directly to our school administration or through the anonymous alert system so they can be thoroughly investigated.”

Briarcliff Group Hoping to Be Next Community to Ban Plastic Bags

By Martin Wilbur

Over the last couple of years, Andrea Vladimir and Pradna Sridhar watched as residents’ proposals in surrounding communities to limit or prohibit the use of single-use plastic bags gained traction.

Local legislation was approved in New Castle and Pleasantville while Croton-on-Hudson has been discussing a similar measure since last year.

But in the Village of Briarcliff Manor there was no movement from the populace. So Vladimir and Sridhar, along with the help of fellow residents Jenny Sendek, Danielle Weisberg and Anne Golden and Meryl Golden, formed a grassroots group, Briarcliff Sustainability, to begin the process of moving the village toward a reusable bag initiative of its own.

“I think the most important thing is education and outreach and (to) let the community know what the problems are with the plastic bags,” said Sridhar.

In addition to a public education campaign, the group has launched a petition drive within the village, hoping to collect 500 to 600 signatures that can eventually be presented to the Village Board. Currently, the petition is closing in on 200 signees, Sridhar said.

Vladimir said that a major obstacle is the one major supermarket chain in the municipality, Acme, has opposed a ban and instead supports a charge for plastic bags. They are supported by the powerful Food Industry Alliance, which supports the fee because the supermarkets can keep the money.

“The village’s other supermarket, Mrs. Green’s, voluntarily does not use single-use plastic bags, she said.

Furthermore, the committee will need to work with another corporate entity, CVS, which has a location in town.

The group has been in contact with the Briarcliff Manor Chamber of Commerce in hopes of reaching common ground, Vladimir said. Briarcliff Sustainability has been reaching out to merchants and is working on developing a questionnaire to gauge where the chamber’s membership stands on the issue.

“It would be nice education-wise just getting people interested in the benefits and making them aware,” Vladimir said of the proposed law.

Those who have concerns regarding a ban on single-use plastic bags have often used the argument that a portion of the customers would shop in a neighboring community that does not have the legislation in place, Sridhar said. For example, since Ossining has no local law prohibiting the use of plastic bags, some fear shoppers will make the trek to that community’s Stop & Shop. Sridhar dismisses the fears.

“I don’t think people will drive an extra five miles for milk and eggs because they have plastic bags,” she said.

Chamber of Commerce President Mike Milano said that the organization met with the members of the sustainability group and the chamber does plan to poll its members in the near future. Changes in a few of its officers delayed movement on the issue but the poll is on the list of action items for this month, Milano said.

“It is unlikely that the chamber will take an official position but it wants its members to have the issue aired.

“We want to be sure that the concerns and questions of our chamber base are heard,” Milano said.

Questions about what any proposed legislation may ultimately look like is still unknown, according to Vladimir and Sridhar. The opening stages of the process has been on education and explaining to people the advantages.

“What we find, I would say 99.5 percent of people would say that plastics is a problem,” Sridhar said. “There are very, very, very few people who wants plastics around.”

It would be easier if Westchester County passes a countywide initiative similar to Dutchess, Ulster and Suffolk counties, they said. But according to a Board of Legislators spokesperson, the county-wide initiative is still in committee and there has been no recent movement on the issue.

Vladimir said what the group would like to communicate to the public is that it’s not only far better for the environment to ban plastic bags but it can be achieved by a fairly easy behavioral change.

“In the end it’s so much more efficient to have everything in your reusable bag,” she said.

Veto of Toll Payer Protection Act the Latest Outrage by Gov. Cuomo

By Robert Kesten

"Cuomo Vetoes Toll Payer Protection Act" in last week's Examiner, the Cuomo policy becomes more and more obvious. Anything he can do to raise revenue, without it being called a tax, he will do, good or bad. The idea of protecting the driving public from a system that isn't working (cashless, human-less toll booths) seems a good enough idea to discuss and work out differences between the governor and the legislature, but of course by signing the bill revenue would be lost. Legalizing marijuana for all uses, could be an important criminal justice issue, but in this case is clearly about the revenue it will bring in to the state.

The Cuomo regime is about finding money, putting burdens on average New Yorkers while protecting the mighty who contribute to his vast campaign treasury. He spends with abandon on faux economic development projects, he burdens the taxpayer with dramatic infrastructure "improvements" with no real evidence they are state-of-the-art for a fast changing 21st century (high ceilings, shopping and food courts are not what is going to make New York

Letter to the Editor

While Noise Complaints Shouldn't Be Dismissed, Airport is a Major Asset

I write with approval of the position of the Business Council of Westchester ("Business Group: Airport Noise Complaints Come From Few Residents," Dec. 18-24) in support of the Westchester County Airport and in opposition to the efforts of a handful of people who use grossly skewed statistics (one or two households submitting hundreds of noise complaints monthly) to try to delay or prohibit safety-related repairs to the main runway at the airport.

Many of us who fly our aircraft (personal or corporate) out of Westchester Airport strive to be good neighbors, observing the Voluntary Restraint From Flying from midnight to 6:30 a.m., using power settings to minimize the noise footprint and giving back to the community through volunteer activities. As but one example, I have flown well over 200 missions wholly at my expense providing free air transportation for needy patients and their loved one to and from necessary advanced medical treatment. My personal experience flying in and out of our airport for three decades is (1) airplanes have become remarkably quieter than they were on takeoff and landing with new engine technologies (remember how loud those old Northwest DC-9s were in the early 1990s?); (2) the air traffic patterns around the airport have not changed in any material way despite claims from current opponents that only recently have aircraft been flying low over their residences; and (3) air traffic volume around the airport is less now than even in 2017, and much less than in the '80s and '90s. Those complaining shouldn't be dismissed as "cranks" as one concerned citizen was quoted as fearing they are being characterized. Perceptions differ and their perceptions of the airport as a problem need to be acknowledged. However, having lived in Pleasantville near the final approach course for Runway 16 for three decades, and often flying that course myself, I do think there is some exaggeration afoot when claims are made that people can't be outside their homes due to low-flying aircraft. Despite the airport having been operating and the air traffic patterns in place well before they bought their homes, our neighbors' message to pilots and operators is a good one: be mindful of noise abatement and be considerate of our neighbors.

At the same time, let's recognize that the airport is a major asset to the Westchester community as a whole, creating hundreds of jobs, bringing in millions of dollars in revenue to local households, providing low-cost airline connections to family and friends in Florida and using state-of-the-art noise monitoring and environmental protection systems.

“How would you feel about living with a room painted black?” my wife asked me after reading about the possibility in a Sunday lifestyles section last weekend.

“Well, if I should decide I want a torture chamber environment, that might be nice,” I responded.

Actually, I don’t know why I wasn’t more open to consider alternative choices for the walls of my living environment, considering that the first time I made my own choice for my bedroom color, when I was a tender 17-year-old, I chose a bright blood red. When my parents sought to sell the house and buyer prospects would come to visit, we frequently heard the response “wow!” when that room was viewed.

In checking the annual announcements of the paint colors of the year chosen by the paint companies, I found that Behr announced Living Coral, a bright coral shade, as its 2019 Color of the Year. The company describes that color as “an animated, life-affirming shade of orange, with golden undertones. ” Life affirming? My God, who could ever suspect that wall color could have such an impact, literally affirming our existence.

It’s interesting to note that Behr’s color last year was Ultra Violet, a deep purple hue that I can’t imagine in any room I’d want to live in. Maybe a blue – reputedly the favorite color of most Americans – would make the cut, but Ultra Violet? In a living room painted that color, I think I would be constantly distracted. But that’s just me, I’m sure.

As a realtor who normally recommends either neutral or low-key colors for interiors and exteriors when preparing to sell a home, I once questioned the choice of a senior couple in my hometown who had their home painted bright violet. When I met them, however, I found them to be the most sprightly and youthful seniors I had ever met. Let them have their fun, I thought. There’s always time to consider a more conservative choice when the house is listed for sale.

Sherwin-Williams chose its 2019 Color of the Year as Cavern Clay, basically in the same color grouping as Behr’s choice, but described in a more down-to-earth manner. “A warm terracotta color with ancient, elemental roots, a nod to midcentury modern style, but with the soul of the American Southwest, which together creates the desert modern aesthetic.”

Checking out both colors, I’m convinced that either would be a little intense for me to live with on a daily basis in any room of my house, with the possible exception of the bathroom, which at least would limit its influence to a smaller space. I’ve always been more neutral in my wall choices, specifically various shades of off-white. This was probably influenced by the choices I was given when I rented my first apartments, both of which were in new construction. The choice given by the builder was simply white or off-white, a creamy version.

Landlords are no dummies about wall color. I remember that both leases specified that I could repaint my rooms any color I wanted, but prior to ending the lease, I would have to restore the walls to the original colors of white or off-white. I pretty much have lived with those colors, certainly in my hallways and living rooms, for the rest of my life.

While I don’t intend to sell my home anytime soon, I have chosen a grayish-white for my entire living environment, living room/dining room and both bedrooms, simply because it expands my living space. That was my objective when I downsized from a 4,000-square-foot colonial to a 1,800-square-foot condo.

Some years ago, I wrote a kind of spooky article about how a spiritual adviser suggested that I paint my bedroom teal – apparently the bedroom dictates my success in life – to achieve even greater success. I followed her advice, although I never would have chosen that blue-green color on my own.

Whether or not it achieved its promise of offering me greater power and success, I can’t say. Who can know whether or not my choice of bright red when I was 17 could have done me better? After all, look what it did for Nancy Reagan.

Mount Kisco Writer Comes of Age as Author in Latest Book

By Martin Wilbur

It might be natural to conclude that since Peter Wood’s first three books were about boxing that his latest novel would use the sport as its backdrop.

If you went solely by the title of “The Boy Who Hit Back,” which was released about a month ago, you would be misled.

Wood, a Mount Kisco resident, has authored a coming-of-age story about an 18-year-old boy whose life disintegrates from popular high school student to skid row after his parents suddenly divorce. He leaves home, heads to New York and looks for an escape.

“I wanted readers, male and female, to find a piece of themselves in each chapter, in each page and in each character,” Wood said. “It’s about loss, or perceived loss, and grief and pain and I wanted to articulate the self-doubt that I always felt and the self-loathing that I think everybody feels at some point in their life.”

Although it might seem more fitting that Wood, 64, a former Golden Gloves boxer in his youth, would be better suited to write about boxing, having had a career as a teacher in the White Plains School District he likely had more experience working with teenagers than he did in the ring.

“It starts out, what does a young girl and a young boy do when their world is crumbling down around them,” Wood explained. “Their family is failing them. They’re failing in school, they don’t care about school, their friends are leaving the ship. So what do they do? They do the most obvious thing an 18-year-old kid would do – they escape.”

So far, the response to the book, published by TCK Publishing, has been outstanding. It’s had a string of strong reviews and has advanced to the top spot in several Amazon Kindle categories, including young adult.

Wood already had some success with his initial books, “Confessions of a Fighter,” which detailed his journey to the Golden Gloves at Madison Square Garden, considered one of the top amateur boxing tournaments, and “A Clenched Fist.” The later is a memoir of his days as an amateur boxer. His first novel, “To Swallow a Toad,” was published in 1987 and also uses boxing as the background for the story.

Still a substitute teacher at Fox Lane and Horace Greeley high schools, Wood said he can relate, even today, to the challenges and self-doubt that is normal for most students of that age. For Wood, there’s a part of him that is still that 18-year-old kid he writes about.

Wood said that he’s pleased that he’s connecting with readers of varied ages because having a connection is one of the key themes of the book.

“It’s a connection with kids and adults,” he said. “I think the healthiest people are the ones who feel connected with themselves.”

This Friday afternoon, Wood will be starting his tour of various metropolitan area libraries with an appearance at the Chappaqua Public Library at 3:30 p.m. He also plans to make appearances at the Mount Kisco and White Plains libraries in the near future, although no dates have been set at either location, he said.

In the spring, he will be making an appearance in East Hampton in Suffolk County.

Children, Families Celebrate Three Kings Day at NWH

By Martin Wilbur

For most families, the gift-giving season ends on Dec. 25. For more than 100 children who participated in a special program at Northern Westchester Hospital, it was this past Sunday that was one of the most anticipated days on the calendar.

Each year on the Sunday that is closest to Jan. 6, the hospital hosts what has become a much-loved tradition of celebrating Three Kings Day, also known as the Feast of the Epiphany, when three wise men presented gifts to baby Jesus.

The program was started by pediatrician Chief of Pediatrics Dr. Pete Richel about 15 years ago. Local families, nearly all of whom are part of Mount Kisco’s Latino community, brought their children to the first-floor conference room and participated in the festivities.

It didn’t matter that the youngsters, from babies to up to 10 years old, had to wait nearly a half-hour for the gift-giving to begin or that the three kings were actually three young women, local college students who volunteered their time to serve as the wise “men.”

It was a morning where there were smiles on everyone’s faces, from the children who were called up by name to receive their gift to their parents who looked on in gratitude.

“They come up one at a time and get their gift,” Richel said. “They love that. They go back and unwrap it and life is good.”

Many of the roughly 140 gifts were donated by Northwell Westchester Health, Richel’s group, Westchester Health Associates, and Toys for Tots. Also, those who attended the hospital’s annual holiday party in December were asked to bring a new unwrapped toy for the children.

Richel said that the hospital’s Department of Pediatrics partners with Neighbors Link so families can register their children and an age-appropriate gift can be ready for them.

On Saturday night, Richel and others brought in takeout food to the hospital and spent the evening wrapping the gifts to give to the children.

Along with the gifts, there were also refreshments and a chance for the local community members to interact.

If you’ve ever had questions or concerns about your diet and fitness regimen, head to Mediterranean in White Plains for a special workshop where Equinox fitness trainer Christian Palmer will ease your dietary and fitness woes.

The Armonk-based gym is holding a free event on Thursday, Jan. 17, where Palmer, a personal trainer, will discuss diet myths and the essential guidelines to meal planning, healthy grocery shopping, nutrition, exercise and how to save time, calories and money.

“I want to influence as many people as possible and introduce the fact that healthy food can be fun to eat,” Palmer said. “Everyone can achieve better health no matter what. It can work if you find the right diet.”

Palmer, 31, who became a personal trainer five years ago, developed a passion for fitness as a teenager growing up in Orange County. An athlete and eventually a professional bodybuilder, Palmer decided to invest his time learning about nutrition when his mother developed diabetes. He said he wanted to educate himself so he could help her.

“I was able to help my mom over time improve her diabetes, and she’s fully recovered,” he said.

Next week, Palmer will use his expertise to debunk diet myths and help those attending develop a lifestyle that balances healthy eating, affordable shopping and fitness. He said many people believe maintaining a healthy lifestyle needs to be overly regimented with boring and tasteless foods, but the right diet can work when people shop efficiently and are aware of the full array of healthy food options.

The 90-minute seminar, which is open to Equinox members as well as non-members, will provide attendees with a suggested guideline for healthy eating and a time-effective plan to reconstruct their shopping routine. Palmer will also advise attendees on quality foods, explaining the difference between certain types of eggs, nutrition bars and proteins.

“People like doing the popular diets but they stop doing them after a while,” Palmer said. “Listening to your body is more important than claiming to follow a specific regimen. If there’s a food that doesn’t make you feel good, reduce the amount you eat or eliminate it. Get in touch with what your body feels like when you eat something.”

Palmer will also highlight the benefits of exercise, stressing how valuable it is for mental and physical health. Exercise is a great way to have your own space and to provide time for yourself, he said.

During next week’s event, Palmer will also stress the importance of dispelling nutrition myths and making sure people focus on their dietary goals. Following a 30-minute presentation, Palmer will answer questions.

“I’ll give you the best information I have on the successes I’ve had,” Palmer said. “Your health is up to you, but I want to teach people to live healthier lives and prove that it’s easier to obtain than they might think.”

Despite Lackluster Moments, ‘The Ferryman’ Has Redeeming Features

I may be going out on a limb here. Not being one to shy away from controversy, I expected to be wowed by “The Ferryman,” currently playing at the Bernard B. Jacobs Theater on Manhattan’s West 45th Street. I must confess to having been at several points underwhelmed, though the play’s riveting culmination made sitting through its three-plus hours ultimately redemptive.

Written by London native Jez Butterworth and directed by Sam Mendes, the play’s timeframe is summer 1981 in rural County Armagh in Ireland’s North, a place rife with “the Troubles.” Irish Republican Army inmates in Cell Block H of the notorious Maze Prison outside Belfast are on a hunger strike for recognition as political prisoners, acknowledged that then-British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will not allow, despite nine prisoner deaths.

That’s all the background Playbill gives us. I felt for those fellow theatergoers who were not as well-grounded in the last 50 years of Irish history as others, unaware of the massive public support and worldwide recognition hunger strikers such as Bobby Sands brought to British bungling, maladministration and coercion.

All that aside, based on the solid critical acclaim the play had garnered since opening last year, I fully expected to be blown away. I was not, at least for the first hour and the first of two intermissions. Things generally moved better after that, and there was much to celebrate.

What I liked: the acting, often brilliant, comic, tragic and moving, though at other times there were struggles, especially when several adolescent male characters dominated the stage. With exaggerated brogues that made the dialogue at times indecipherable, they were the lowest point of the play.

But those moments were more than offset by the brilliant performances of Laura Donnelly, who plays Caitlin Carney, the widowed wife of Seumas Carney, an IRA operative missing for the last decade; Fionnula Flanagan as Aunt Maggie, who holds her young great-nieces in thrall with tales of old Ireland; Dean Ashton, understudy for the role of Quinn Carney, brother of the missing Seumas, whose final actions at the play’s end brings the audience bolt upright in their seats; and Stuart Graham as the steel-eyed, silver-tongued IRA commander, intent on keeping the Carneys from creating a windstorm of controversy when Seumas’s body is discovered in a bog across the border in the Republic, hands tied behind his back and a bullet in his head.

What I also didn’t like was perpetuation of the enduring stereotype of the Irish as a people for whom the center of every day revolves around the consumption of alcohol. In this play everyone drinks—adults, adolescents and children. Beer and liquor flow freely morning, noon and night. I welcome the day when we can shake this dubious mantle, the crutch that keeps on crippling.

And now, to the calendar. The next event looming in the Celtic calendar is the feast of Imbolc. Also called Saint Bridget’s Day, it is a festival midway between the winter and spring solstices, celebrated over Feb. 1 and 2. We’ve already counted in these pages three of the four Celtic seasonal festivals—Bealtaine, Lughnasa and Samhain.

Welcome to the fourth! Like the others, Imbolc predates Christianity and commemorates the Celtic goddess of fertility, Brigid, or Bride. And though there are several “legitimate” Saint Bridgets, scratch the surface and the overwhelming spirit of devotion bestowed to this day upon the name likely stems from those pre-Christian times.

Some of the traditions associated with the feast are the fashioning of “Brigid’s Crosses” and Brideog dolls, carried about from house to house, which the saint/goddess was thought to visit. To curry favor with her, folk would make a bed in the house for her, with some food and drink left and items left for her blessing. She in turn would protect home, hearth, livestock and possessions.

Elementary Students Learn About Athletics, College Life at Pace

By Neal Rentz

About 260 fourth- and fifth-grade students from White Plains’ Church Street Elementary School received a taste of college life last Friday.

The students were taken on a tour of the Pace University campus and several Pace student-athletes spoke to the children and answered their questions at the Goldstein Fitness Center. The pupils invited to the Court to Classroom program attended that morning’s women’s basketball game between Pace and Molloy. They also had the chance to meet the home team’s players and the Irish Setter Mascot T-Bone.

Pace Director of Athletics and Recreation Mark Brown said this was the second Court to Classroom program. The first one was held two years ago.

“We value our role as an athletic department in a larger institutional community and we also value our relationship in the larger external community,” Brown said. “Our student-athletes and our coaches do a tremendous amount of external outreach.”

Court to Classroom is part of a players and coaches’ outreach, which also includes going to local schools to read, visiting senior centers and residences and fundraising for charitable causes, Brown said.

“We introduce and strengthen the tie between academic successes and achievement and athletic opportunities and potential,” Brown said. “We bring the students in and talk to them about the college experience. They get to meet our student-athletes. They get to meet some faculty members and people on our staff. Everybody just has a really good time.”

One of the lessons of the day was the importance of fitness, including allowing a person to deal with stress in a healthy way, he said.

Associate Athletics Director for External Operations Drew Brown said an important part of the day was attending the basketball game.

“It’s great for them to see what’s going on,” he said. “It’s something to aspire to.”

Other critical skills, such as having a healthy lifestyle, getting a good education and goal setting were also discussed.

Church Street Elementary School fifth-grade teacher Jackie Miller said having the students see what a college campus is like at a young age is inspiring for the students. They leave thinking about how they’re going to go to college and keep playing sports.

“It’s really important that we demystify what college is,” Miller said. “For them, to get on a campus and see what it’s like and build that confidence and that comfort is really important.”

Fifth-grader Deya Allen said the program was fun and interesting. It was her first tour of a college campus and was “very different” from her elementary school experience, she said.

Allen, who indicated she is planning on going to college, attended a lecture focused on how math is related to sports. She said swimming and ballet are important parts of her life.

Another fifth-grader, Logan Emmert, also enjoyed the program.

“The gym is cool. Everything is pretty cool,” he said.

Pace students discussed the campus facilities, including the sports facilities. Emmert, who plays hockey and baseball, said he looked forward to meeting the Pace women’s basketball team.

“I’ve never been to a basketball game,” he said.

The Pace athletes who participated in the program showed the younger students how they work. One of the questions the Pace athletes were asked was how they manage their time.

“It’s one of those things you learn with time,” said sophomore Austin Gilbertson, a guard on the men’s basketball team.

“It was really great being with these young kids,” added Peyton Wejnert, a junior forward on the men’s basketball team. “I was in that position once talking to college kids. Now I’m speaking to kids and I hopefully can give them the idea that what they’re doing matters and how it can affect them later in life.”

For The Birds

By Brian Kluepfel

For obvious reasons, not everybody wants to get up early on New Year’s Day and walk a couple of miles. But this year I did, and with great results.

I took the #13 bus from Ossining to Phelps Hospital in Sleepy Hollow, part of my resolution to take public transit whenever I can. In spite of the fact that I bought a new car for commuting in December, my trip to Parsippany would take several hours by public transit and probably end my marriage, so I’m driving it.

Last week, at Rockwood Hall parking lot, I joined a group of more than 40 birding enthusiasts (well, some maybe were newbies, or fledglings, as we call them in Audubon-speak).

Larry, a longtime Saw Mill River Audubon board member who also led my group on a dire search for birds during a blustery Christmas Bird Count on Dec. 29 in Putnam County, led this walk, too. The New Year’s walk is a tradition Saw Mill River Audubon established about a decade ago and its popularity seems partially based on the weather. (Last year it was 9 degrees at 9 a.m. and there were fewer participants than that.)

This year, along misty, foggy pathways through former Rockefeller property, we saw several common winter birds, well worth a look because there weren’t a lot of sightings: black-capped chickadees, always a bundle of bustling energy, a great winter bird; tufted titmouse, bit-like miniature blue jays with their peaked crowns and a dab of yellowish orange accenting their abiding grey/white two-tones; and blue jays themselves, a really magnificent looking bird we sometimes take for granted because of its commonness, but a beautiful blend of nuanced blues, blacks and whites and often part of a cackling chorus of its species.

Crows and ravens, birds of a feather, as it were, similar, yet different in their all-black, the smartest of birds and as raucous, if not more so, than the jays. Crimson cardinals (male) painted the bushes, along with their brown-colored female partners, the lady birds accented with those bright orange bills.

A true highlight was a red-tailed hawk, seemingly posing for pictures just up the trail from the Rockwood Hall parking lot. Again, if you don’t get to see a lot of birds, you take the time to look at those you do see, and the shifting array of browns, copper reds and whites as well as the hawk’s intimidating visage and baleful hunter’s eye, are well worth five, 10 or even 15 minutes. A red-tail is of the genus buteo, a family of broad-winged, soaring birds of prey with rounded wings. You may be lucky enough to see its cousin, a red-shouldered hawk, near the Croton-Harmon Metro-North station.

Well, everyone wants to see a bald eagle, and we were lucky enough to capture three or four on the day (in our binocular and camera lenses, that is). I could even take credit for picking the first one out of the sky, although I did not clearly identify it, leaving that to one of my other Audubon colleagues.

No bird sighting is guaranteed – that’s part of the risk/reward of setting out on foot on any given day in search of our winged friends – but seeing the majestic national bird along the banks of the mighty Hudson was one hell of way to begin the year. If our friend William Shakespeare, always dealing in augers and omens, was to label this one, I think it would have to be a positive indicator for the year to come.

Join Saw Mill River Audubon on its regular Monday walks, as well as weekend trips. Don’t forget the upcoming Eagle Fest at Croton Point Park on Feb. 9. The Audubon’s full events calendar can be found at www.sawmillriveraudubon.org.

The Sweet Spot for a Famous Grape

By Nick Antonaccio

You Heard It Through the Grapevine

The age of the vines and the aging of the wines (I like the quasi-alliterative ring to that) are the true discerning traits of the two regions. In Ribera del Duero, many vines are more than 50 years old and in some cases over 100 years old. These produce grapes of unique concentration, color and character. With these old-vine grapes, the winemakers generally age their wines much longer than their counterparts in Rioja and other Spanish wine regions. This results in wine of unique strength, finish and character. And, lest one needs to further differentiate the two regions, the Tempranillo grape, the dominant grape in Ribera del Duero, is called Tinto Fino here versus the straightforward name Tempranillo in Rioja.

What are the characteristics of these wines? A typical description: aromas of dark, perfume-like cassis fruit on the nose with hints of mocha powder. Mouth-coating blackberry, licorice and violet layered nicely with hints of coffee, spice and mineral. Fine tannins through the long length, elegant and delicious.

And yes, other grapes are grown and vinified in the region. I had the opportunity to sample several of these at a recent Wines From Spain tasting and symposium I attended in Manhattan. There I discovered two grapes grown sparingly in Ribera del Duero, Albitillo (white) and Bobal (red). Wines of both were enchanting: the Albitillo, expressing a minerality typically found in Tuscany and the Bobal, redolent of unctuous purple color, strong acidity and fruit, with an underlying essence of dark chocolate.

Let's focus on the aging of wines practiced in Ribera del Duero. It is important to understand the classification of wines that you'll find on each bottle of wine. There are four aging classifications to look for. The entry level is Tintos Joven, young and consumed in-country. Next come Crianza, wines that have been aged at least two years in oak. Third is Reserva, produced from superior grapes and aged at least three years in oak.

The top rating is Gran Reserva, which is granted to a small handful of wines that are only produced in certain years and aged for a minimum of five years. In particular, one winery, Vega Sicilia, stands out from the rest. One of its Gran Reserva wines, Unico, is produced from vines that are over 100 years old and is aged for a minimum of eight to 10 years in oak; in certain vintages as many as 23 years. In several years the winemaker may even blend wines from different vintages to achieve its uniqueness. As you might expect, this wine commands one of the highest prices for a Spanish wine. The current release, 2009, retails for up to $300 per bottle.

If your budget (or your conscience) can't equate the cost of a bottle of wine to the cost of a case of some other wines, take heart. There are a number of excellent bottlings available at more reasonable prices. Try Condado de Haza ($17), Pesquera Crianza ($27), Finca Torremilanos (Montecastrillo label) ($10); and Bodegas Montecastro ($14).
